predictableVon Anna[spoiler alert] The premise was interesting, but actually, only the last 100 pages or so made this worthy of my time. The first two-thirds of the book dragged on and on and I almost gave up when they wed and the story became interesting again. It seemed to me that the novel wanted to be more than a historical romance but failed to deliver. She rushed the solving of the whole 'he is an alcoholic' problem and it seemed unrealistic. I suggest you skip this and read the Silent Revenge from the same author as that is more like one expects from this genre.

KurzbeschreibungGriffin Blackmoor blames himself for the tragic accident that claimed his wife and young son. Riddled with guilt, he prays that during the Crimean War an enemys bullet will end the consuming torture he cant escape. Instead, that bullet finds his best friend. Now there isnt enough whiskey in England to make him forget all the people who have died because of him. But before he can drown himself in an endless sea of liquor, he must keep the promise he made his dying friend. Except that promise is sure to risk an innocent womans lifeand his own battered heart. When her brothers sudden death leaves her destitute, Lady Anne Carmichael knows she must marry. Although her dark beauty earns her the attention of Londons most eligible bachelors, only one man can stir her soul with his kisses. Griffin Blackmoor is everything she swore she never wanted. So why does his love feel like exactly what she needs? As much as she loved serving up sundaes and malts from behind the counter, she closed up shop after penning her first novel. Now she spends nearly every waking minute writing, guiding her heroes and heroines to happily ever after. The author of more than a dozen historical novels, her books are enjoyed by readers around the world. She lives with her family in the rural Midwest, where she devotes what free time she has to volunteering in her community.
