The beautiful and spirited Gytha is a dutiful daughter and prepared to marry as her parents wish in order to honour a longstanding contract. Robert is the 3rd heir in line to Saiturn Manor and her intended, as William and Thayer are reported dead. Thayer arrives to celebrate William's wedding and as well as shocking those gathered with the fact that he is very much alive, he suddenly finds that he is the groom under the terms of the contract. He is called the Red Devil because of his red hair and fearsome reputation on the battlefield. He bears many battle scars and is deeply cynical about women, having been hurt badly in the past. He had believed that Lady Elizabeth loved him and was shocked when she tried everything to lose their baby. Thayer recognised her true nature and immediately took his new born son Bek into his protection. Gytha is instantly drawn to Thayer, but is also aware that he holds back, not quite trusting her completely. Thayer finds it impossible to believe that someone as beautiful as Gytha could be happy with him. He is entirely comfortable in his role as a knight and has the absolute loyalty of his men, but he is on guard and ill at ease when it comes to women, even though he sees no artifice in Gytha. Their marriage thwarts the plans of Robert and his uncle to gain power and the uncle is determined to get the land and Gytha by any means possible. Elizabeth is willing to go to any lengths to refill her empty coffers. Events play to Thayer's insecurities and the emotional turmoil hampers his normally cool mind. Thankfully they also have loyal friends to stand by them as each crisis unfolds. The plot is fast-paced with many twists and turns, both in battle and at court, right through to the end.
