Who knew that men suffered the same anxiety and anguish as women over finding someone with whom to share their lives? Frank Scozzari holds nothing back in this exploration of Morgan Stanfield, a 38 year old who is becoming increasingly desperate in his search for love. Told in first person by the main character, we get right inside his head with a panoramic window to his world. We meet him as he scours dating sites, having turned to them after a seven-year relationship ends when the woman decides its going nowhere and calls it quits. The story is cleverly told. The anxiety permeating throughout is obvious but the anguish is subtle. Scozzari infuses his character with a mix of self-deprecation, dark wit, spurts of great optimism dashed down with cynicism, well-meaning advice, mirth and derision, as well as the cruelty of others. The location and scenic descriptions of St Petersburg are intimate and brought to life. This is a book Im still thinking about several days after I finished it.

Kurzbeschreibung
For centuries, poets have argued that unrequited love is love in its strongest form. From Afar is a timeless tale of Morgan Stanfield's search for love in the far northern city of Saint Petersburg, Russia. Leaving the warm climate of Santa Barbara, he embarks on a four-day odyssey where he encounters a Russian beauty, a prostitute, a wise old babushka, an American chauvinist, intellectuals, the Russian mafia, and the 'face' of love, and comes to know how love from a distance can be more captivating than love close on hand.
