Historical romance writer turns out a memorable contemporaryVon Ein KundeJohn David "JD" Marshall is the ultimate absent minded computer nerd who trusts no one, not even himself. In Los Angeles, JD is currently working on a revolutionary computer program that needs approximately three-six more weeks to complete. However, JD panics when his uncle informs him that a financial loan officer will soon be visiting him to see what progress has been made on the new program. Adding to JD's tumbling world, he receives a call from an Arizona teenager claiming to be his son. JD panics and does what he always has done when the heat is up, he runs (computer in hand). In Kentucky, JD is injured in a car crash. He recovers in the home of Nina Toons, a local math teacher. Nina thinks all men are worthless and JD knows he has had nothing but bad luck with women. When the pair fall in love with each other, they must still overcome their past demons and the threat from the outsiders chasing JD before a permanent relationship can be bonded. GARDEN OF DREAMS is an interesting contemporary romance that features two charming lead characters and an assortment of intriguing support players. The story line is crisp but occasionally is derailed by revelations from inner souls of the lead protagonists. In spite of this slight flaw, Patricia Rice serves up a fabulous romantic intrigue that will please fans of the sub-genre. Let's hope this author will be writing contemporaries for a long time to come.
