A new take on ghost storiesVon FehuI've read other books of this author and liked them and since this one was part of KU I promptly downloaded it as of of my first membership reads. It's a great story that sucked me right in. Haints or restless dead can attack the living and once upon a time it would have been Dans job to lay them to rest, now not so much, that is until Leif comes into town and asks for help. Both of them have tragic pasts that hold them back and the romance is slow to develop and of course there is a necromancer lurking around wreaking havoc. I loved the book since it wasn't just a romance story, there is a lot of suspense and a solid storyline. Both characters are somewhat broken, one maybe more than the other and as a reader one can watch them grow and deal with their past with each others help. Just the ending felt a bit rushed otherwise this was a very engaging read.

Hawk grew up in the wilds of North Carolina, where she was raised on stories of haints and mountain magic by her bootlegging granny. After using a silver knife in the light of a full moon to summon her true love, she turned her talents to spinning tales. She weaves together couples who need to fall in love, then throws in some evil sorcerers and undead just to make sure they want it bad enough. In Jordans world, love might conquer all, but it just as easily could end up in the grave.
